Yes, you guessed it right. This is a breakup song.

It's written from the side of admitting you're healed on your lips, but in your heart you're still praying for her. You met her because you dreamt she was in danger. You met her as a stranger, helped her without boundaries, and somehow ended up hurting her the most.

And even knowing better, with the option to end things peacefully, you chose to be controlling, until there was nothing left to self-sabotage. So yes, you finally let her go. You just wish she's still alive.

Letting go is the last thing love can still do right. Doing it gently is the part we get to choose.

IF IT'S OVER, END IT WITH CARE. HOW YOU LEAVE IS THE LAST THING THEY KEEP.
